Notes on the transcription

What records have been transcribed?

The Earl of Haddington established the Kelso Dispensary in 1777. It was remarkable for its time and treated people of all walks of life from all over the Borders area and beyond. This initial booklet is a transcription of just the first year of a much larger volume of original records, which is in fact the first volume of a sequence of volumes in various formats which run from 1777 continuously down to the early 20th century. The original records are held by the National Archives of Scotland under the reference HH71. For indexed transcriptions to further years please see our website www.maxwellancestry.com or contact us regarding searches in the unindexed material.

What information is in the original register?

This is a full transcription of the information contained in the register; the columns in the register are as follows: Name, Parish, Patient Number, Recommenders, Admission, Age, Disease and Event of their case. In almost all cases these have been filled in. However, when a column has been left blank this has been clearly noted in the transcription.

The “event of their case” column proves very interesting as it is often the only surviving record of a persons death in this time period long before the civil registration of deaths in Scotland. With the ages of some patients being recorded as 70 or 80 this is also a record that could help trace a family history back to the 1690’s or before. As we transcribe more volumes these records will become available through our website.
